

Just over three years ago, I discovered election-atlas.ca. To this date, it remains one of the most impressive websites I have ever encountered. The site has riding-by-riding maps of most federal and provincial elections since 1867, with many of the more recent elections featuring precinct data that lets you examine election results from individual neighborhoods. On top of that, the ridingbuilder tool enables you to create your own electoral districts—using this tool to create theoretical multi-member districts has become a strange obsession of mine.

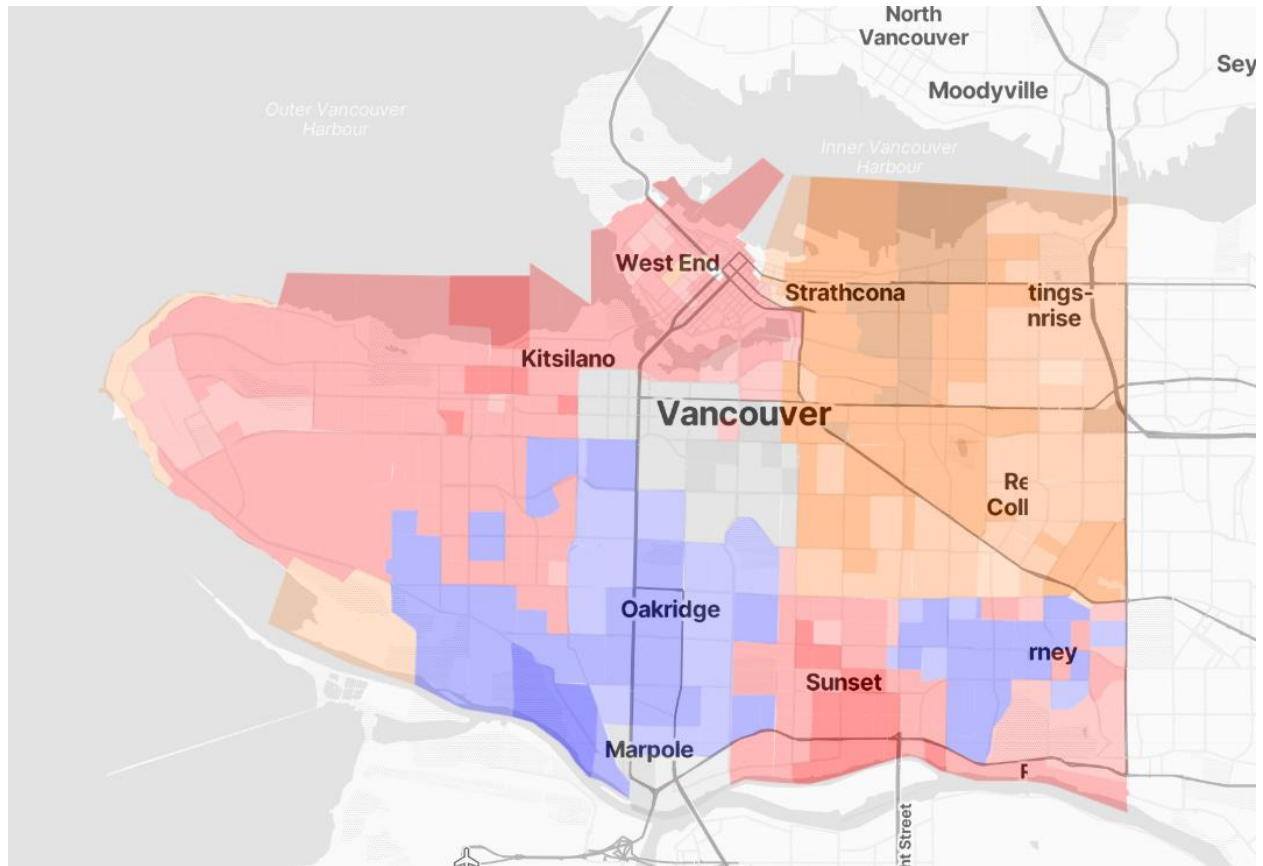

However, like the election results maps, ridingbuilder also lets you access precinct data from recent elections at both the federal and provincial levels. This data can be used to create election maps that show precinct results, with a gradient revealing where parties have stronger and weaker support. Over the last year, I have created a plethora of these maps, and I intend on sharing a few of them with you today:

Election results in Vancouver from the 2021 Federal Election:

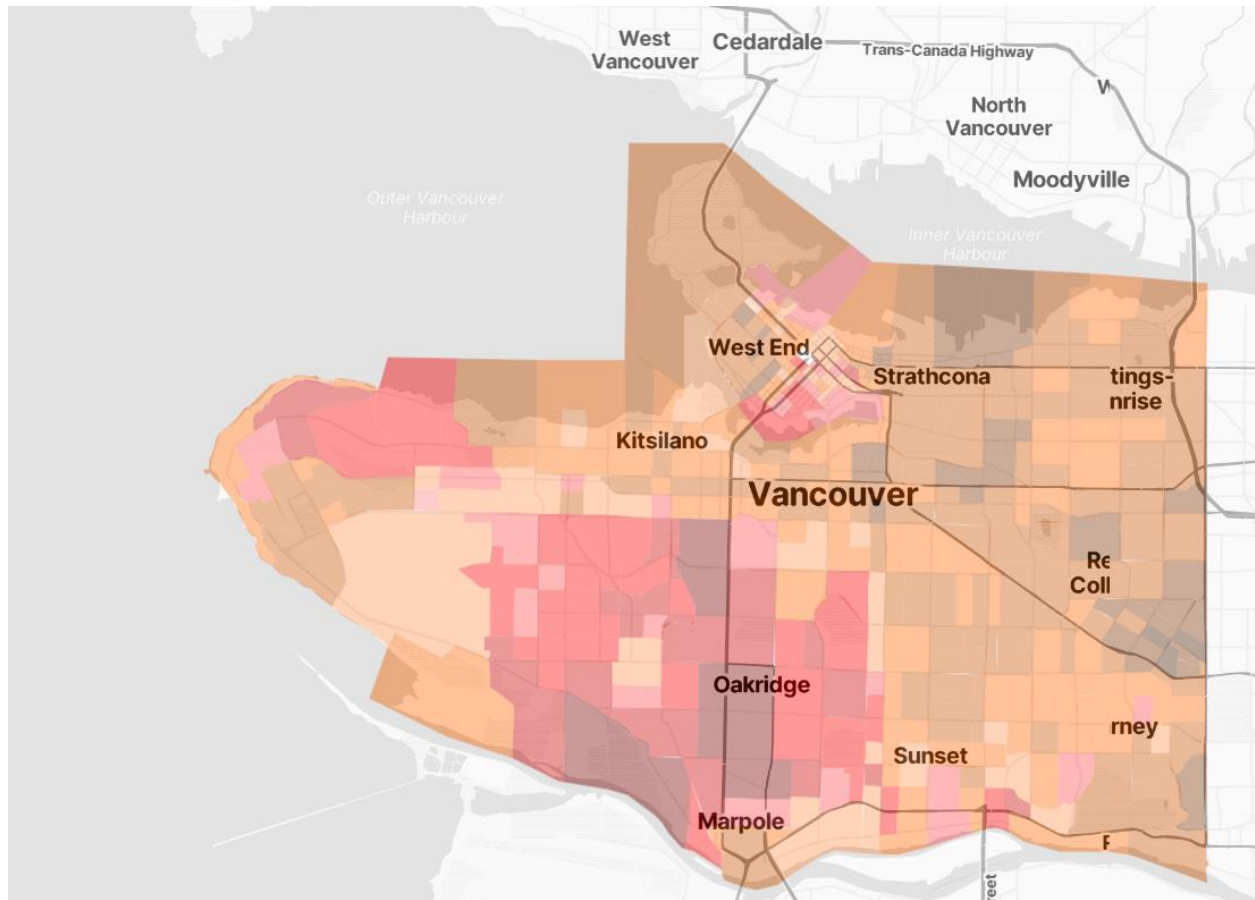

Election results in Vancouver from the 2019 Federal Election:

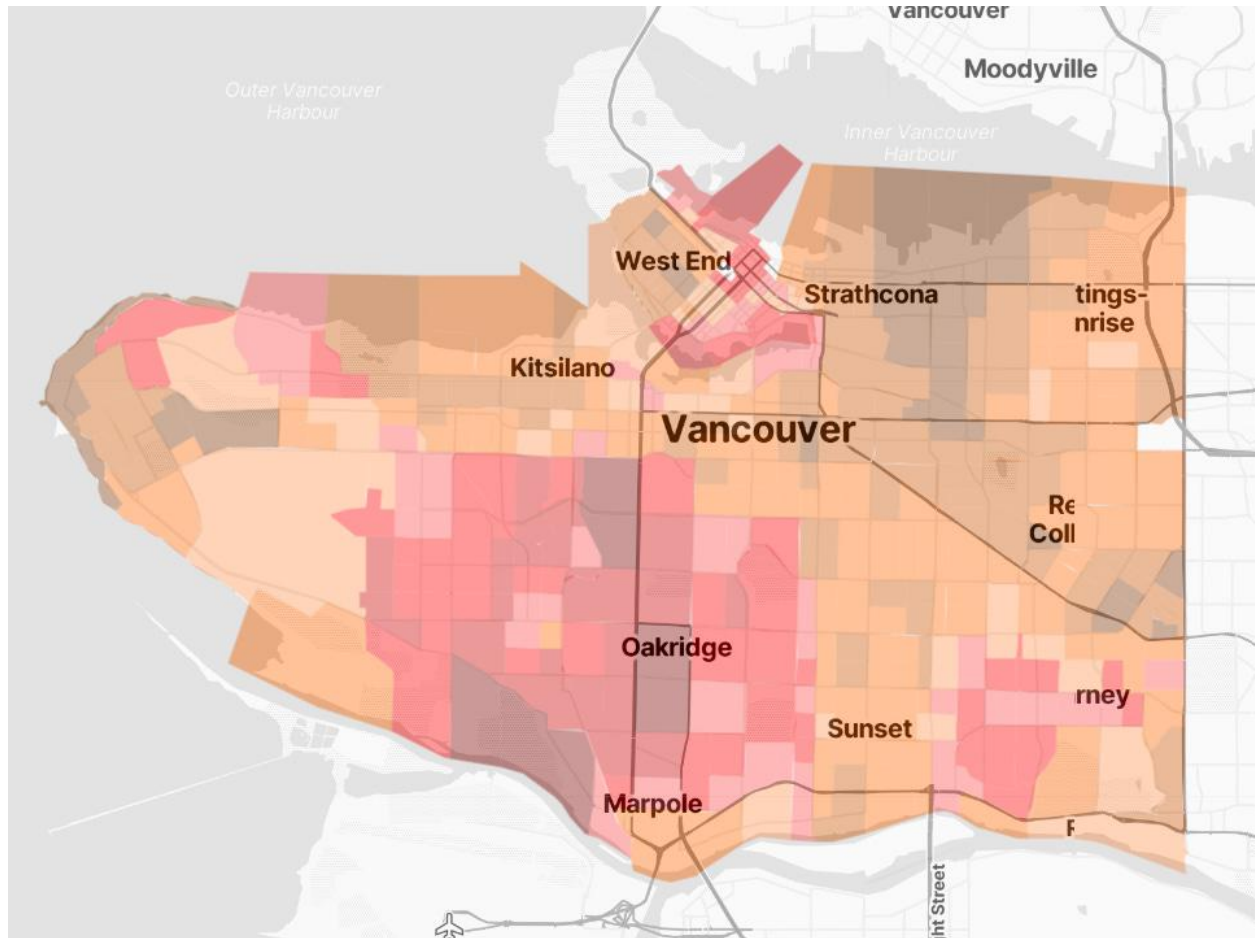

*Grey represents Jody Wilson-Raybould, as she was running as an independent in Vancouver-Granville.

Results in Vancouver from the 2020 B.C. Provincial Election:

Results in Vancouver from the 2017 B.C. Provincial Election:

Results in Montreal from the 2014 Quebec Provincial Election:

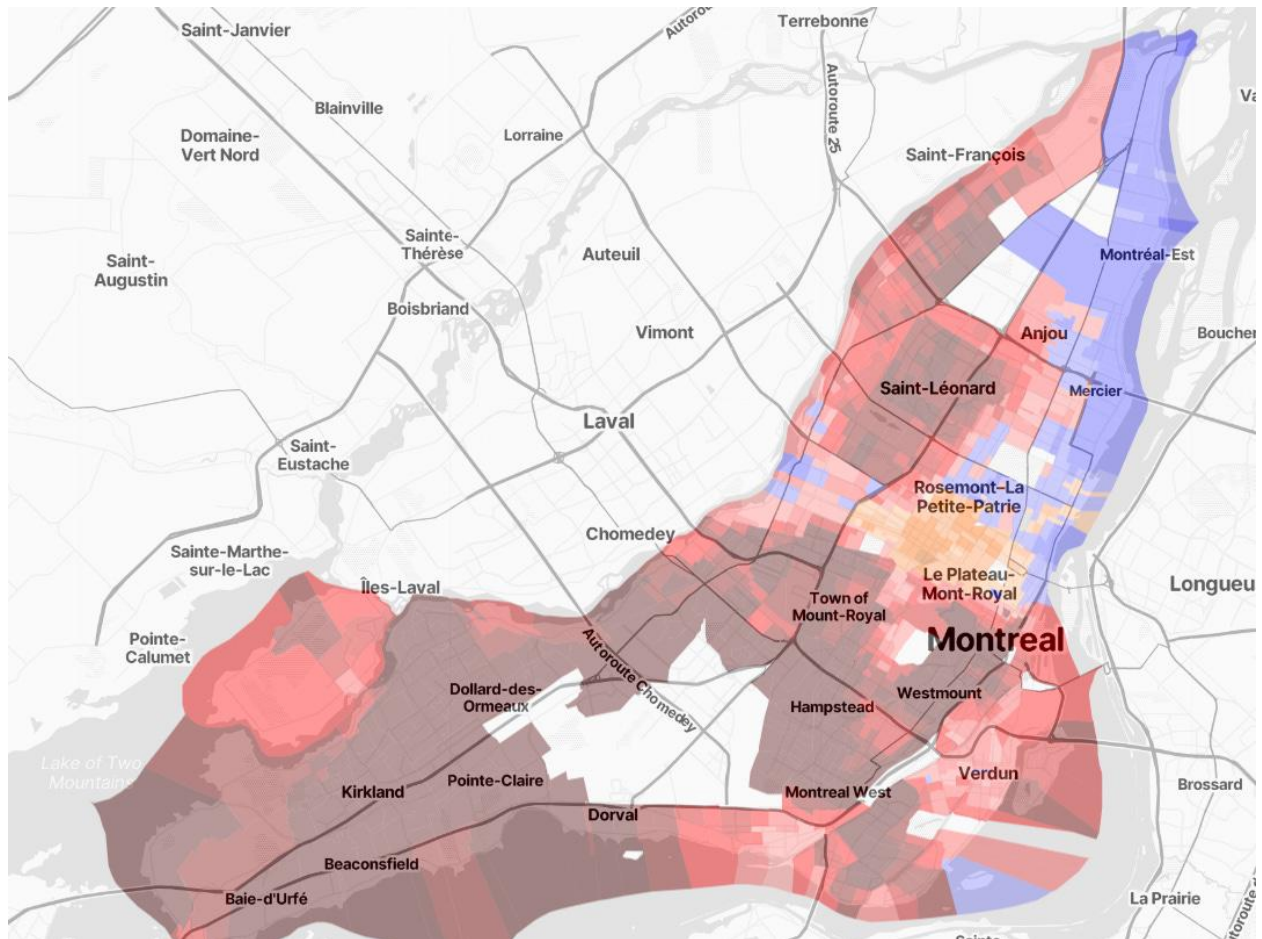

*Quebec political party colours:

CAQ: teal

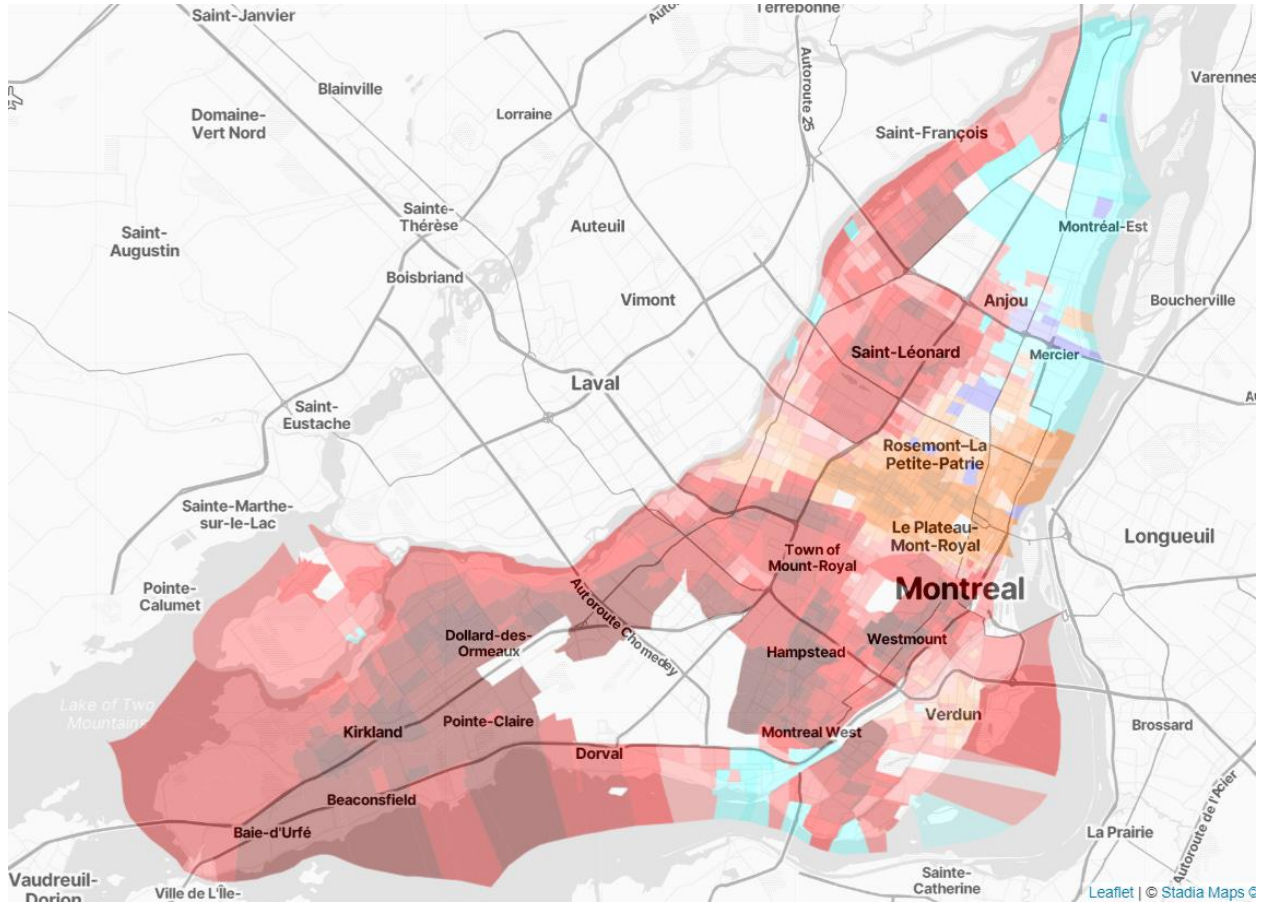

PQ: dark blue

Liberal: red

Quebec Solidaire: orange

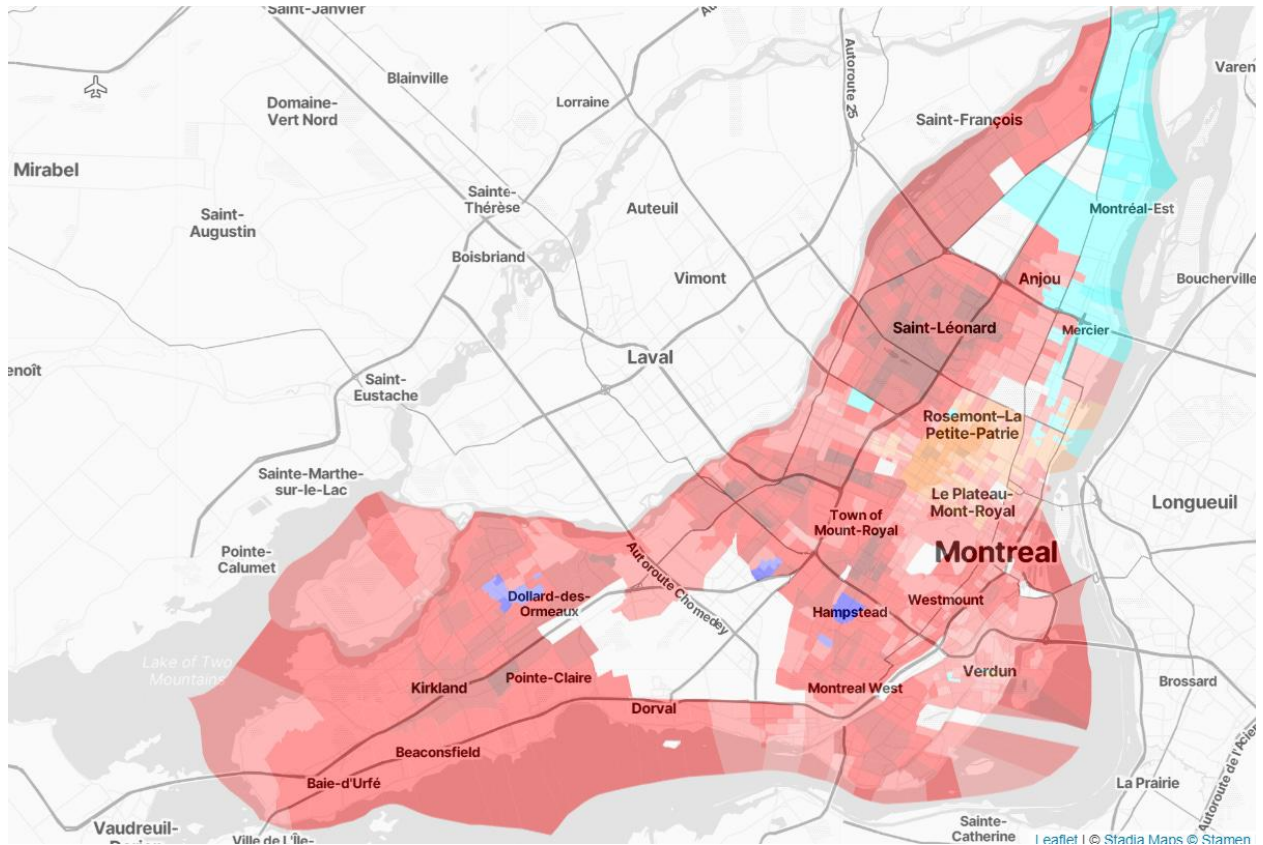

Results in Montreal from the 2018 Quebec Provincial Election:

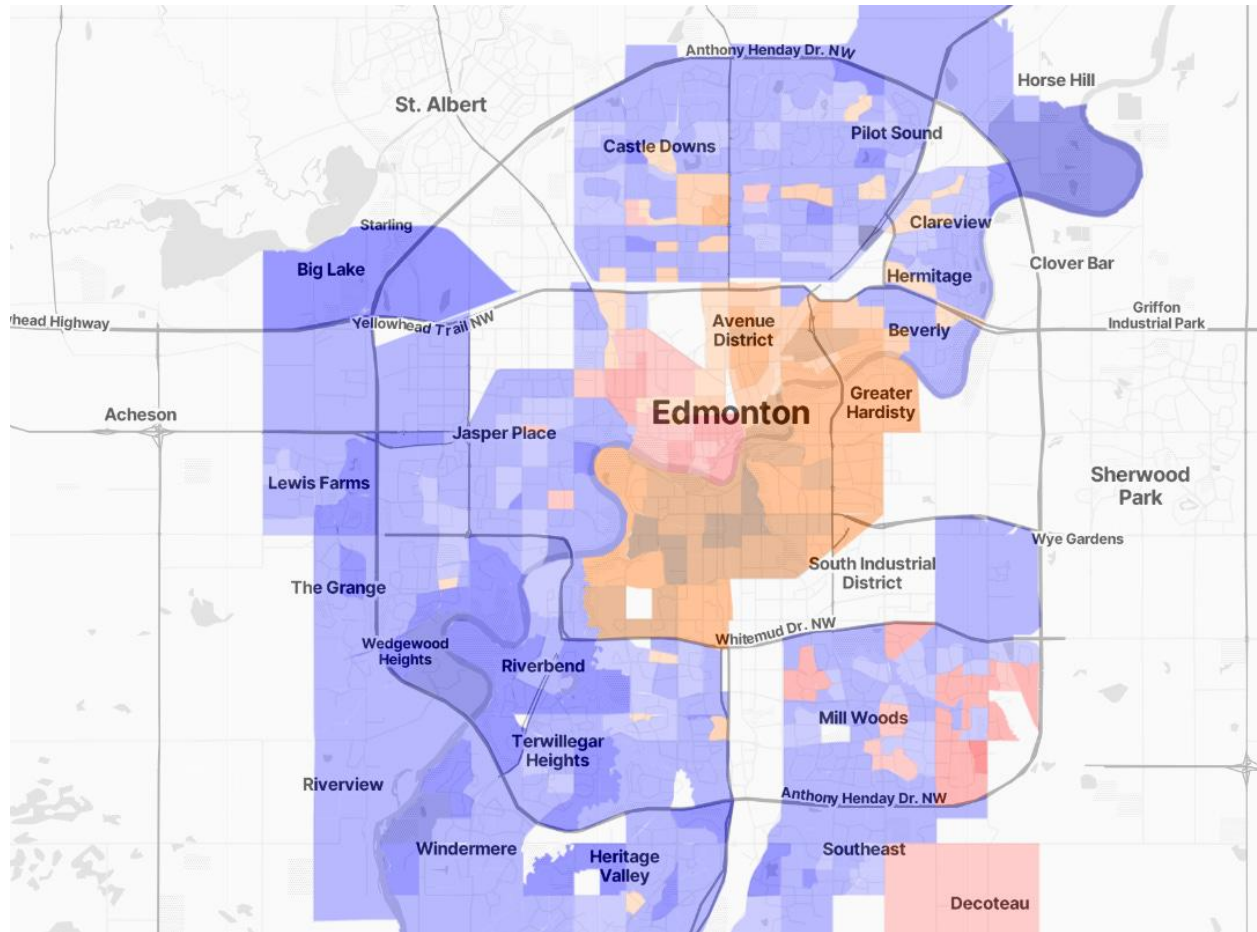

Montreal results of the 2021 Federal Election:

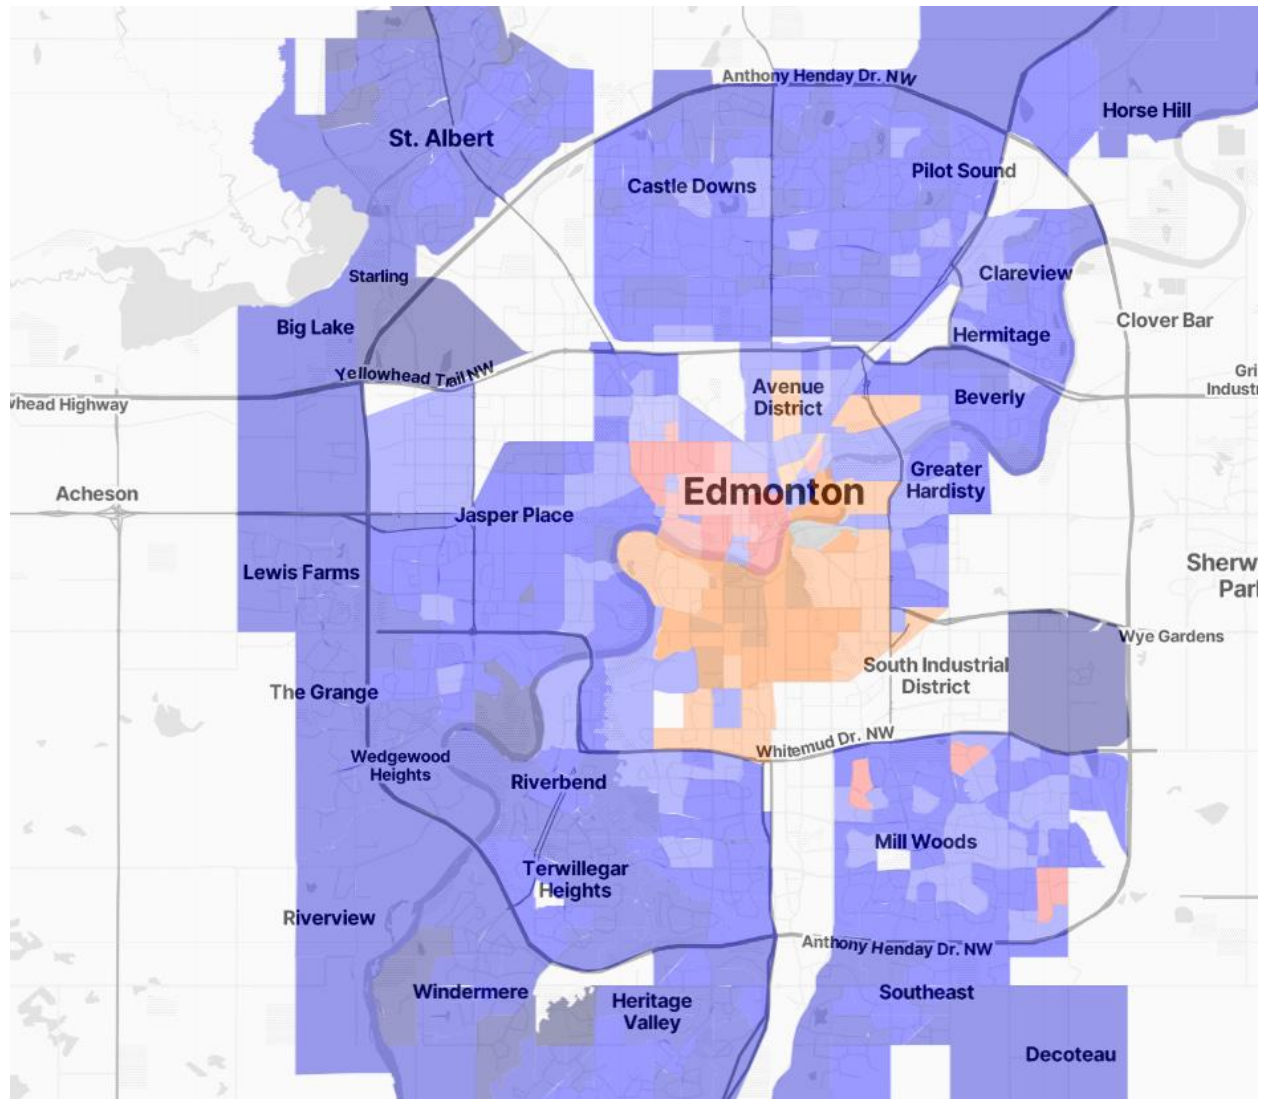

*Precincts that voted Bloc Québécois are coloured teal

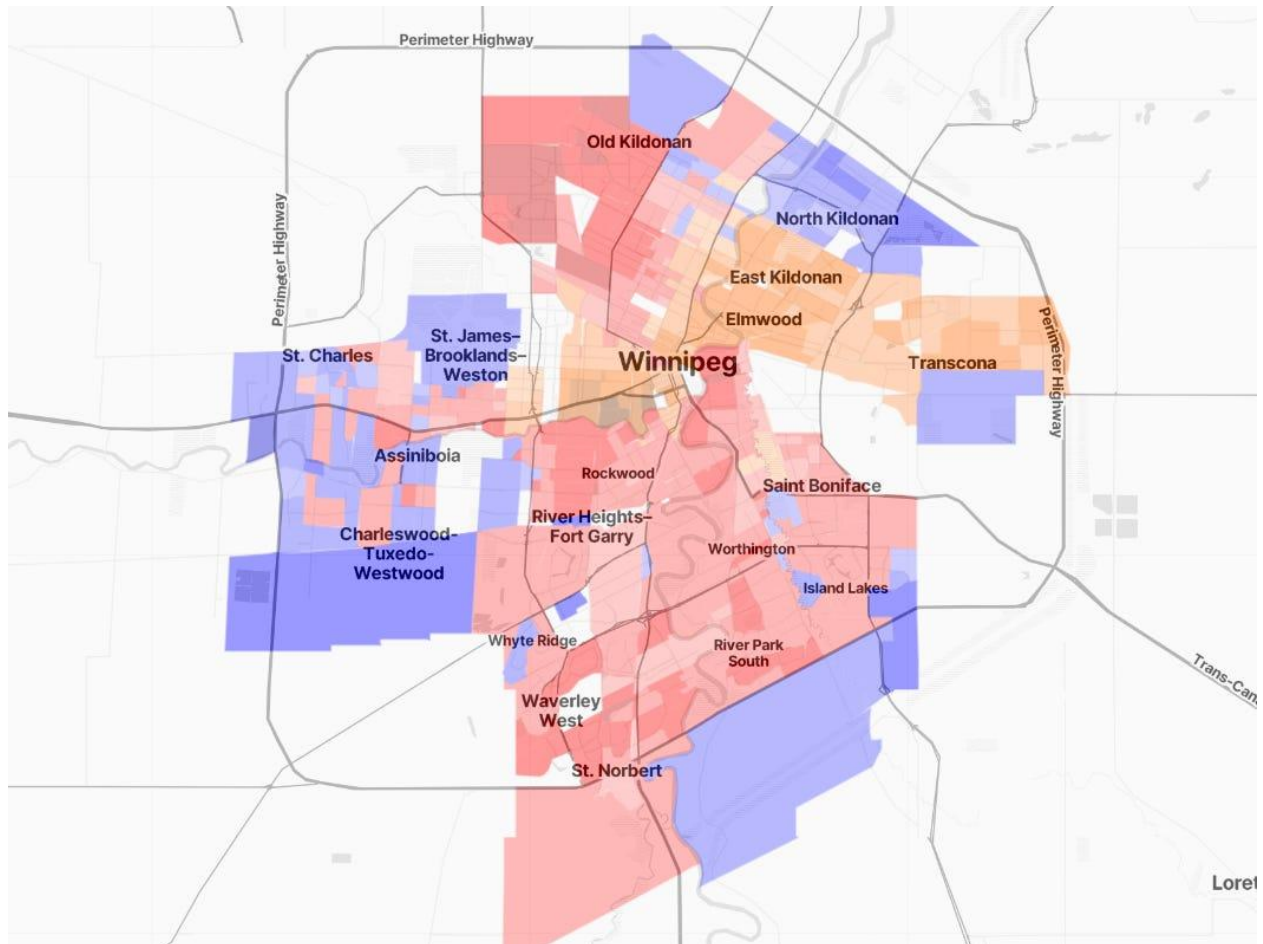

How Edmonton voted in the 2021 Federal Election:

How Edmonton (and St. Albert) voted in the 2019 Federal Election:

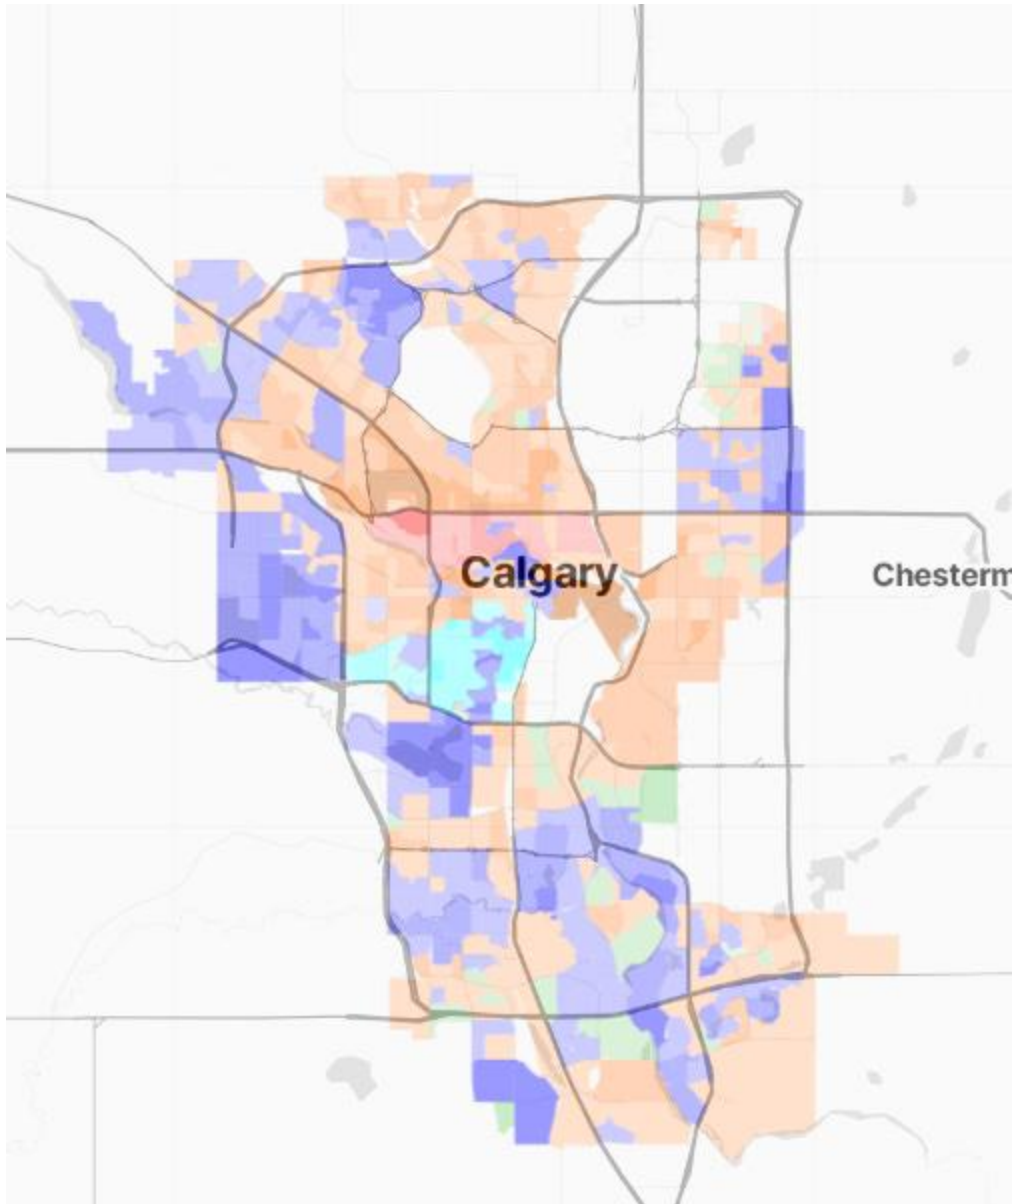

How Winnipeg voted in the 2021 Federal Election:

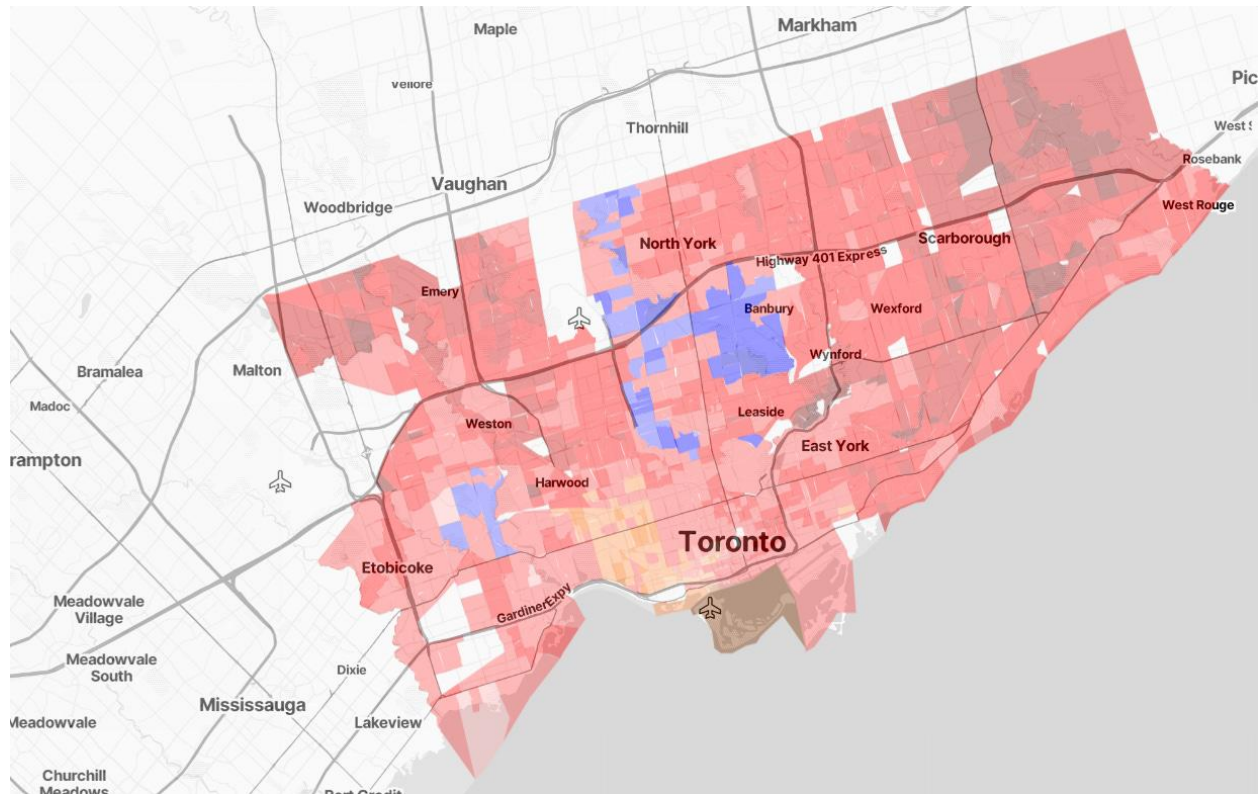

How Calgary voted in the 2015 Alberta Provincial Election:

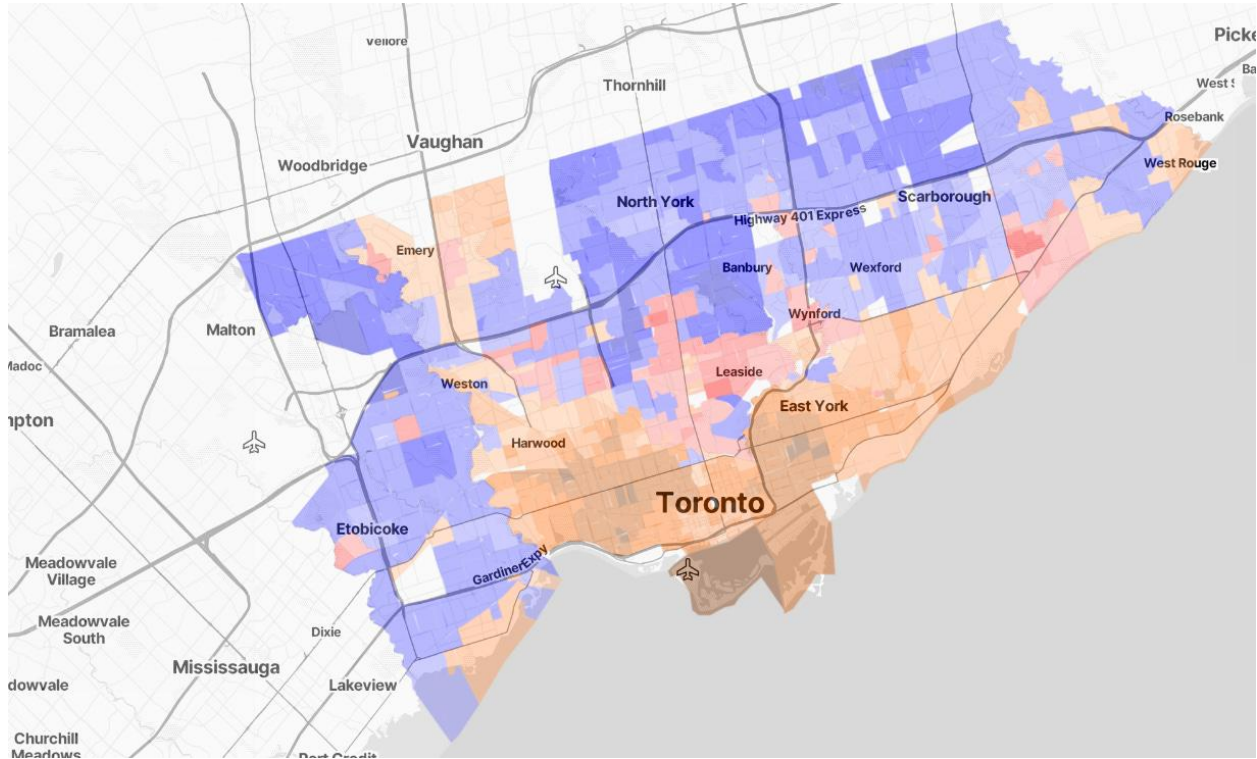

*Teal is for the Alberta Party, Dark Blue is Progressive Conservative, and Green is Wildrose.

Results from Toronto in the 2021 Federal Election:

How Toronto voted in the 2018 Ontario Provincial Election:

I have more maps that I might include in a future post. But for now, I hope you enjoyed these maps and found them interesting!